Reply of Mr. Baughman.

The editor of the "Star and Sentinel" has two distinct peculiarities. One is, that when he wants to say anything, he resorts to say something; the other, that he is always finding fault and does not stick to the truth. It is the same old thing, another bubble has burst and passed into space, without creating any commotion. He should stop sending our bubbles. All he has said can also be likened into a less drum: when he beats without hurting, he makes a great noise, but like a drum it is full of emptiness; he has made a great noise in regard to the position taken by the Committee. Mr. Butt and the Market Committee. They had a perfect right to take the position they did, just as much so as the editor of the "Star and Sentinel" had to take the position he did in defense of the minority by rucking a great deal about nothing; by sending our bubbles only to burst and pass into space; by using arguments as empty as a drum. What had he and the minority to do with the Committee? Mr. Butt, or the Market Committee? Nothing! According to his flimsy, empty argument, the Market Committee should have reported in favor of the minority instead of the majority of the people, who were opposed to the market; this would have been a pretty state of affairs, but all right for the editor. The editor says, "What about the rights of those people in town who were in favor of the market?" that is the minority. "Could they expect justice in a report that came from such a man?" What does the editor mean, when he uses the word "justice," to the minority? He has not defined it. The report did not come from such a man; it came at least from a majority of the Market Committee and the report represented the majority of the people. The market question with us, was not a personal matter, it was a matter of the majority of the people and we do not regret what we did, we have represented the majority of the people properly and for the best interests of the taxpayers and consumers; it was just what they wanted and that is what we define as justice to the majority. The great difficulty is, the editor of the "Star and Sentinel" is sore because he could not have things as he wanted them, "justice to the minority," which would have been an injustice to the majority. The editor says, "Compiler does not need to give any very lengthy explanation of the manner by which Mr. Baughman received a majority in the Third Ward." The event is yet fresh in the minds of everybody connected. This is the only truthful statement made by the editor in all he has said; it is still fresh in the minds of the people and it needs no lengthy explanation; we will give a brief explanation: Mr. Baughman and Mr. Bushman were both elected in the Third Ward by a majority of honest, legal voters, but if it had been allowed, they would have been defeated by fraud and illegal votes such as has been practiced for a number of years in the Third Ward by the opposition; then, "there would have been mighty little in the whole occurrence of fraud and illegality that would really eventually on Republican integrity, or political honor and the "Star and Sentinel" knows it full well." We desire, in conclusion, to nail several flies which the editor of the "Star and Sentinel" has made use of and we shall drive the nails hard, where they belong. The editor has said that "Chairman Baughman never called a meeting of the committee and that he never consulted a single member in the preparation of the report that was presented to Council," also "that we tried to sell cider at 18 cts. per gallon." These assertions we emphatically deny and brand them as willful and deliberate lies, which can be proven as such whenever the testimony is wanted; it was the Chairman's duty to prepare the report; it was given to him to do; he did consult; the committee was together; we did not try to sell any cider at 18 cts. a gallon, but sold it at 8 and 10 cts. a gallon, whenever the editor of the "Star and Sentinel" wants the proof of these things let us know and we will present it. The editor is sore of his defeat and of being so completely blundered; he was standing at the switch; he and his dad belong to the minority. Now he will have to get another job for his dad; all this makes him sore. It is high time when a young American editor, with a limited amount of brains, can tell or teach the Compiler, Mr. Butt, the Market Committee or the Town Council what to do, for the best interests of the people. In all the editor of the "Star and Sentinel" has said he has not shown a spark of good principle.

WITH LINCOLN AT GETTYSBURG

Story of Speech by Rev. J. B. Remensnyder D. D., LL. D.

In this article, in "Hearst's Magazine" for February, Dr. Remensnyder recalls the actual scenes of the occasion of Lincoln's deathless speech upon the battlefield of Gettysburg. The writer is one of the few living people who heard Lincoln deliver the famous address. He is himself a veteran of the Civil War, having served with the 131st Pennsylvania Volunteers. Dr. Remensnyder's contribution is particularly appropriate at this time when the nation is celebrating, more widely than ever before, the one hundred and seventh anniversary of the birth of the Great Emancipator.

If ever the "chance" of a battle seemed throughout the world it was that of Gettysburg. It was one of the few or six or had struggles of history. It gave a staggering blow to the little army of the South, and it shot a thrill of new inspiration and hope through out the North. As also, it was fought upon Northern soil, the thought of a great national memorial and dedication was natural.

The idea originated with the great war governor of Pennsylvania, Governor Curtin. He corresponded with the governors of the seventeen other loyal States, and a commission, with Judge Wills as president, purchased a site of seventeen acres within the Union line of battle and arranged for a monument to be erected on Cemetery Hill, the center of a circle filled with Union dead.

Edward Everett, the first orator of that period, was invited to deliver the memorial address. Judge Wills thought it fitting that President Lincoln should also take some part. Accordingly he wrote inviting him.

President Lincoln promptly accepted the invitation. The ceremony was fixed for November 19, 1863. On the eighteenth the President left Washington for Gettysburg. The town was a small one. There was but one small railroad, the Hanover and Gettysburg, leading into the place. By this the President and his party arrived in the forenoon. He was entertained at the house of Judge Wills, where a number of guests were invited to dine with him in the evening.

The writer was a student in the college at the time. In the evening the students in a body, he among them, gathered about Judge Wills' residence, clamoring for a speech. We must have taken up our cry about the time dinner began, and our calls ever growing more emphatic, must have ruffled the temper of the diners, as we, too, chafed under the long wait we had to bear.

Finally the President appeared. The lights were dim, and we could not see him with much distinctness. What he said was about this: "I would like to give you college boys a speech. But I am the official representative of the country. Consequently what I say will be reported far and near. This subjects it to criticism, which might pervert it to the hurt of our cause. Hence, either I should think carefully over what I say, or not speak at all. And, as I have had no time for thought or preparation, it is better for me to say nothing. Good-night." This certainly most sensible speech, whose wisdom was vindicated by the deliverance on the morrow, was quite a damper to our spirits. We felt greatly disappointed. Our pride was somewhat humbled, and the impression made on us was rather unfavorable.

The morning of the historical event, November nineteenth, dawned bright and clear. It was an idyllic November day. The exercises were to be conducted on Cemetery Hill, a beautiful spot on an elevation just outside the town limits. Here, in company with a fellow student, I hurried, in order to secure the best place for seeing and hearing. We selected a spot facing the temporary platform for the speakers and only about forty or fifty feet distant.

President Lincoln soon came. He was mounted and leading the procession. He took his seat on the platform directly in front of where we were standing, and facing us. I had seen him the year before, shortly after the battle of Antietam, when I had the privilege of seeing him and General McClellan ride in review of the army in the field, and when I saw the soldiers throw their caps in the air in wild enthusiasm. But I did not then have the opportunity of studying the President's features at close range as I did here. He sat upon a rude wooden rocking-chair, which, from the disproportionate length of the back, seemed to have been specially prepared for him. He seemed either absolutely unconscious that he was being observed, or as entirely indifferent to observation as when in the solitude of his mother's Kentucky woods. The contrast, in this respect, between his difference and the polished orator who was speaking, so self-conscious and oratorical in every gesture, was most striking. This abundant, evidently arose from the strong natural concentration of which Mr. Lincoln was capable, and which he used to great advantage in his address. He seemed to be profoundly conscious of the fact that he was being observed, and yet he seemed to be entirely unconscious of it.

At last the great moment came for him to speak. He arose and stepped slightly toward the front. His appearance was greeted with a great outburst of cheer. As the sun was shining brightly the crowd had protected their heads with their hats. A cry went forth from the throng that all hats should be removed out of respect to the President. This, under the circumstances, was not most pleasant, and a small group near me retained their headgear. At this protest became so general and strong that, out of deference or fear, the demand was obeyed. The President then delivered his historic address.

The address was read in an easy, unaffected manner, without the least effort or affect. The speaker's voice was not loud, but its clear and tenor tones made it heard distinctly to the furthest limits of the audience. It occupied a little over two minutes in delivery. General Wilson, who knew the President well, says that he held his manuscript in his left hand, but did not refer to it, evidently knowing it by heart. My observation and memory are, therefore, contrary. I only noticed one sheet. And I did particularly mark that he held it in both hands, and made no pretense of doing anything else than reading it.

My remembrance is that the address was greeted with hearty applause. Yet to show how true that memory is, a college classmate, now an honored clergyman, who was also present, writes me:

"I differ from you as to the applause Everett received much applause at the close of his polished oration. Lincoln's immortal address evoked none at all. The hearts of his hearers were too deeply stirred by feelings that forbade boisterousness. A one-armed soldier near me voiced the feelings of the vast audience. With tears streaming down his face and the handless limb upraised, he exclaimed, 'God bless Abe Lincoln!'"

And this seems to be the general opinion. Yet the Associated Press account the next day states that the speech was five times interrupted by applause, and that at the close there was "long-continued applause." This sustains my remembrance.

The solution of the seeming discrepancy probably is found in this, that there was for a brief interval a deep silence, which some regarded as lack of appreciation, but then, the pent-up and awed feeling of the throng burst forth into hearty applause. It is a fact, however, that the address was not appreciated at anything like its true value at the time. The press notices were chiefly devoted to the Everett oration, and the unique performance of Mr. Lincoln only came gradually to be recognized.

My own impression at the close of the address is thus recorded in my diary:

"Attended dedication of the national cemetery to-day. Greatly admired the very forceful eloquence of Mr. Everett, but was profoundly impressed by the dedicatory address of President Lincoln. I found myself held in a spell while he was reading it. At its close I turned to my companion and said: 'What do you think of that?' 'Mighty good, beat Everett, what do you think of it?' was his answer. I responded 'That was as fine as anything I ever heard. I predict that it will be a classic in English literature.'"

And I cannot but think that the general impression of the audience was that it voiced the theme of the hour in a form of matchless perfection. This, it is well known, was the opinion of Mr. Everett, who generously wrote Mr. Lincoln the next day:

"I should be glad if I could flatter myself that I came as near to the central idea of the occasion in my two hours, as you did in two minutes."

Time, which alone is the true standard, because of its tests of universality and permanence, has assigned the address a place foremost among the utterances of men. Nor was its merit to have been altogether unexpected. Although Mr. Lincoln had emerged somewhat suddenly from obscurity, and was looked upon for a time as a rather ungainly Western figure, still in the campaign with the accomplished Douglas, he had given evidence of extraordinary ability to see to the core of a question, and to state his convictions with a homely but logical and acutely telling force.

The writer's friend, the Rev. Dr. Burrell of New York City, tells of hearing, when a boy, one of these great debates. He says he was an ardent admirer of the "little giant," whose fame as an orator was on every tongue, whereas Abraham Lincoln, in rising to reply, struck him as almost grotesque. "But," he said, "while I had been altogether carried away by the eloquence of Douglas, and was in fullest sympathy with him, when Mr. Lincoln was through, I felt that he had not left his argument a leg to stand upon." There was a depth of feeling, a tenderness of pathos, a warmth of heart in the martyr President, which naturally tended to frame these clear thoughts in forms of poetry, and to robe them with the beauties of art. Very finely cast sentences are frequent in his utterances.

We are not to wonder that the hand which could write with such felicity, could have penned the exquisite sonnet of the dedicatory address; nor can we wonder that the heart that could so finely and so profoundly sympathize with the nation should have loved to-day as it loved to-day.

At last the great moment came for him to speak. He arose and stepped slightly toward the front. His appearance was greeted with a great outburst of cheer. As the sun was shining brightly the crowd had protected their heads with their hats. A cry went forth from the throng that all hats should be removed out of respect to the President. THE SECRET OF LONG LIFE

Do not sap the springs of life by neglect of the human mechanism, by allowing the accumulation of poisons in the system. An imitation of Nature's method of restoring waste of tissue and impoverishment of the blood and nervous strength is to take an alternative glyceric extract (without alcohol) of Golden Seal and Oregon grape root, Bloodroot, Stone and Mandrake root with Cherrybark. Over 40 years ago Dr. Pierce gave to the public this remedy, which he called Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery. He found it would help the blood in taking up the proper elements from food, help the liver into activity, thereby throwing out the poisons from the blood and vitalizing the whole system as well as allaying and soothing a cough.

No one ever takes cold unless constipated, or exhausted, and having what we call mal-nutrition, which is attended with impoverished blood and exhaustion of nerve force. The "Discovery" is an all-around tonic which restores tone to the blood, nerves and heart by imitating Nature's methods of restoring waste of tissue, and feeding the nerves, heart and lungs on rich red blood.

Mrs. Doris.

"I suffered from pain under my right shoulder blade also a very severe cough," writes Mrs. W. Doris, of New Brooklyn, S. C., to Dr. R. V. Pierce, Buffalo, N. Y. "I had four different doctors and none did me any good. Some said I had consumption, others said I would have to have an operation. I was bedridden, unable to sit up for six months—and was waiting but a few short days. You advised me to take Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery and Dr. Pierce's Pleasant Pellets. When I had taken one bottle of the Discovery I could sit up for an hour at a time, and when I had taken two bottles I could do my own house and tend to the children. I feel like a new woman in all and was in good health. My weight is now 125 pounds."

$950

Electric Light and Self Starter

$1075

TOO many people are fooled or misled by taking bare automobile prices as a positive indication of the intrinsic value of a car. This is exactly the wrong way to go about it. Because one article is priced higher than another it does not follow that that article has a greater value.

Take two cars practically identical. The one the $950 Overland. The other is the average similar car—priced at $1200—which offers no greater value.

As a matter of fact there are any number of $1200 cars which are not, in value, the equal of the $950 Overland.

But how are we to know this?—you ask.

That's simple. Ask some real questions; find out some actual facts; make some specification comparisons—and then it is the easiest thing in the world to sum up the intrinsic value of any car made.

For instance:

The $950 Overland has a wheel base of 114 inches.

The wheel base of the average $1200 car is no longer than this—often shorter. So in this respect you get more for $950 than you do for $1200.

The $950 Overland has a powerful 35 horsepower motor.

No $1200 car has a larger motor than this. Here is equal value and, in most cases, more value for less money.

The $950 Overland tires are 33 inches x 4 inches—all around.

No $1200 car has larger tires. Again—equal value—our price $250 less.

The $950 Overland has a complete set of electric lights—throughout—the same as on most $1200 cars. Some out-of-date cars still cling to the obsolete gas lamps. In the first instance the $950 electrically lighted. Overland is the value equal of the $1200 car, and in the second instance has more value than the $1200 (gas lamp) car. In either case our price is $250 less.

Next comes the matter of equipment. The $950 Overland is complete —a jeweled speedometer, top, curtains, boot, windshield, electric horn—everything complete. No $1200 car made has more complete or better equipment.

And so on throughout the car. Point for point—specification for specification the $950 Overland is, in every essential respect, the equal of any $1200 car on the market.

So we warn you. Ignore the prices. Compare the actual facts first. Then compare the facts with the prices and you get the intrinsic value.

We are making 50,000 cars this year—the largest production of its kind in the world. And every Overland purchaser will save at least 30 per cent. and get a superior car.

See the Overland dealer in your town today. Then see any competing car. Make the comparisons we suggest. Then you will better realize how hard a comparison of this kind is, on any other car costing in the neighborhood of $1200.

Phone our dealer for an appointment, while the matter is fresh in your mind.
